person a really hard thing to fight against. It's hard to tell the fire department, "No you can't have the street to put out fires," or you don't think of the department of transportation as being, um..

TFSR: ..nefarious.

D: Yeah. Or doing the work of the mayor or the police. So that's happened but it's also increased some people's antagonism again which is great. There are certain barricades that people are trying to keep erected and some people are feeling duped, honestly. They're feeling like they got played by these department heads.

TFSR: Are people staying in conversation about that? It sounds like it, if you're hearing it, people aren't just throwing up their hands and walking away.

D: Yeah, it's interesting. I feel like the anarchists and other radicals have maybe been a little burnt out and are exhausted to a degree. I've felt this way a bunch, where I'm kind of like "okay, that's the end of that" and then something happens and brings the energy back. So I'm hoping for something like that. The precinct is still there, there's an underground tunnel to the precinct so every once in a while you'll see a cop in the building doing stuff. But figuring out what to do with that building beforehand or making sure it doesn't get back into the hands of the police is a big priority for a lot of the people. The zone is one of these areas where some people are really, really invested with it and are going to hold it down til the last dying breath. Where other people might just be like, so much energy is going to this and our demands aren't really being discussed with the city or leveraged.

TFSR: Well someone could always just like liberate a cement truck or whatever and fill in that tunnel pretty easy. [laughter] I saw pictures of a precinct in Minneapolis that just got a bunch of cinder blocks sealed up in front of the entrance in front of it.

D: That's hilarious.

What's been nice is that here people are like 'how moveable are these things?' Anything in the zone people are like 'we could do with it what we want' which is really cool, that mentality is still there, it's just how the energy turns. I'm personally waiting for the "Every Day" chants again.

TFSR: Weird question but is it CHAZ or CHOP? What's the difference?

D: Uh...man, I'm the wrong person to ask. I'm up for either really, I also just don't really care. The CHAZ thing I think was like a media branding more than
